(U) Berlin– Political extremism rose sharply in Germany last year among far left, far right, and Islamic extremist groups according to the country's domestic intelligence agency. A report recently released by the agency notes that there has been not only an overall increase in membership of these groups but also an increase in violence and brutality. A significant rise in racist hate crime has been seen likely in response to the increasing number of refugees and migrants, well over one million people now that have entered Germany looking for political asylum. Last year, there were 75 reported arson attacks against refugee shelters in Germany, five times more than in 2014. SOURCE: 28 June 2016, The Guardian
